The European Head and Neck Society (EHNS): A True Multidisciplinary Platform for Head and Neck Oncology

In early 2006, the official documents to establish the European Head and Neck Society (EHNS) were signed by its founding Board in Brussels, Belgium. This is the final result of a road towards a true European multidisciplinary platform on head and neck tumours.

The EHNS was originally developed by surgeons all performing head and neck cancer, who recognized the importance of collaboration with different specialties. In this perspective, EHNS achieved a critical goal in bringing variety of disciplines together. It is a "Society of societies", and composed of individual persons, national and multi-national societies, associated study groups oriented towards head and neck cancer research, training and treatment throughout Europe and elsewhere in the world. The society is led by a President and Secretary General, supported by a Treasurer, Past-President and five Board members. The current board of EHNS represents multidisciplinary composition including head and neck surgery, oral and maxillo-facial surgery, radiation oncology and medical oncology.
